Which Bound the Present with a Past

Generation.

The death of Mrs. Sarah Z. Brockunier and death of Mrs. Saran 2. Brockunier, widow of the late Rev. Sanuel R. Brockunier, a noted Methodist minister, well known to a large number of our readers, breaks another link in the chain that connects the past and present of our history as a city by a living personality.

present of our history as a city by a living personality.

By family and birth Mrs. Brockunier was connected with the very beginning of Wheeling, and she lived to see and appreciate its growth and progress until now, when it has become populous and wealthy. She was the second daughter of John Clark and Rebecca. Zane, his wife, and was born in 1707 in the old fort at Wheeling, then occupied as a habitation. Her father was engaged in mercantile pursuits for some years, but subsequently removed to a farm on the Ohio side, within three miles of Wheeling, where he built and occupied one of the first dwelling houses bnit by a white man in that portion of the northwest territory. After the removal of the faurily as became an lumate of the house of her grandfather, Col. Ebenezer Zane, the first settler and original proprietor of Wheeling. Here in her childhood days she saw and knew many of the leading spirits among the early pioneers, and was accustomed in after years to relate many entertaining adventures "by flood and field" that she heard narrated by them. At this time the Wheeling settlement was a somewhat straggling village, a great portion of what constitutes the populous city being occupied as ling vilinge, a great portion of what const ates the populous city being occupied a arming land, or by the dense mazes of th rimeval forest. The location then adopte imeval forest. The location then no her father was soon followed by the far West. It is difficult for us to realize the vast progress which the country has made within the compass of one lifetime, unless we recall that here, within the knowledge of this venerable woman, the frontiers of civil-ization have been pushed from Wheeling to the Rocky Mountains. A vast population fills the intervening territory, where only roved the savage tribes then occupying the fertile land. Italiroads and steamboats and telegraph have taken the place of the pack horse, the "broad horn" and the slow-going posiman.

It was an era worth having lived in. It is an honor to have contributed, even in some humble measure, to the material and moral advancement of the country in such an age. By her marriage Mrs. B. became identified with one of the great religious movements which have so profoundly affected the civilization of the age, and loyally rendered such support, encouragement and help as a zealous, capable and energetic wife could do. Yetshenever descried her domestic duties for more ambitious fields. Her life was devoted mainly to making the home life of her family one of sweet, endearing and noble character. She gave to it her best energies, and a richly endowed intellectual and moral nature. Her charities she did not starve by keeping them at home, but was hospitable, benevolent and generous, and universally won the esteem of all among whom her lot was cast. At a ripe old age she has been gathered from the seene of her earthly duties, leaving behind the fragrance of a well spent life and of a noble christian character. It was an era worth having lived in. It is
